Wordtech Communications, United States, 2013. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 226 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.The bright poems of Christine Potter s SHELTERING IN PLACE are anchored in the real, the daily, yet evoke a larger realm beyond their pleasing surfaces. Sometimes I worry there won t be enough Chris Potter poems to see me through my life. Potter tracks the weather better than any poet I know. She knows how to find strength even under that lying sun and the way she shares her map and forecasts I feel tended to, included. She recognizes shelter in things others don t recognize. All the while she runs away, I know she is going somewhere safe and I follow her, feeding on her wise and funny charm. -Sherry O Keefe These are poems of lucid memory, written to explore and evaluate it, cope with it, comprehend it, rage at it, and finally, sometimes, to explode it. Embedded in these memories is a catalogue of childhood fears, fears of the incomprehensible and of lies seemingly meant to cover up the incomprehensible, fears of the simultaneous desire to escape mortality and to remain. Christine Potter reflects on how we can make our peace with illness, catastrophe, and death, whether our own or that of others. This gives rise to questions as various as the possible answers to her father s demand to know, at 8 am on a Good Friday morning, whether she agrees that Easter is a celebration of a lynching. Her black humor and irony are understated here, and Potter assesses the delight as well the toll it takes to seek out traditional virtues such as generosity of spirit, kindness, and the wisdom to go on. -Terese Coe Christine Potter brings alive the...
